-Traffic jams are caused by too many cars and lorries. The number of vehicles allowed into city centres should be limited to reduce the amount of traffic.

-Traffic problems in cities increase journey times to work and school. People should pay to drive into cities during busy times such as mornings and evenings.

Firstly, one of the most obvious problems in big cities is traffic jams. They are caused by too many cars and lorries, especially during rush hours. It can easily be seen that a long line of vehicles gets stuck in the traffic. As a result, it takes longer time to get to work or school. A solution to this problem is to limit the number of vehicles allowed in city centres to reduce the amount of traffic. Moreover, people should pay to drive into cities during busy times such as mornings and evenings. By doing this, more money can be raised to invest in public transport.

-Air pollution caused by traffic has increased health problems. Environmentally-friendly cars should be cheaper/ public transport should be more reliable and efficient.

Another worrying trend is that air pollution caused by traffic has increased health problems. For example, people in big cities seem to suffer from respiratory diseases more often than those in the countryside. To tackle this problem, the government should help to produce cheaper environmentally friendly cars. Also, public transport should be more reliable and efficient so that people would rely on public transport more. This would lead to a reduction in the amount of traffic and air pollution would be decreased consequently.
